and half years have improved the relative profitability of agriculture. Government's resolve to improve the economic viability and well-being of small farmers is reflected in higher public sector outlays for agriculture & allied activities which is the main source of public sector investments, substantial increase in farm credit, vigorous extension support including involvement of non-governmental organisations as also reduction in controls on domestic and foreign trade in agriculture. These measures are intended to create more employment opportunities in agriculture and help the farmers including the small farmers. The Government has accorded the highest priority for employment generation in its economic reforms by enhancing Central Plan allocations for social sectors and poverty alleviation and employment generation programmes.
